- Bull Base Bear Scenarios

Risk Reward for United Overseas Bank (UOBH.SI) has been updated

Reason for change

Post 1Q25 result, we have revised up our earning estimates for 2025/26/27e by 0.4%/2.6%/2.4% respectively. NII estimates for 2026 and 2027 have been revised up, reflecting the bank's success in lowering NIM sensitivity to rates. Lower credit card fee income forecasts led to lower fee income for all three years, and we have lowered trading income estimates for all three years as well. Cost forecasts remain unchanged. We have lowered ECL estimates for 2025, mainly reflecting lower than expected specific charges in 1Q25.

Given the relatively small revision in the earning estimates, we have left bear/base/bull case values and PT unchanged. Retain OW.

PRICE TARGET S$38.20

Three-stage Gordon Growth model, probability-weighted (bull 10%, base 60%, bear 30%) to reflect expectation for a lower rate environment and downside risks driven by heightened macro and geopolitical risks.

Key assumptions: cost of equity and sustainable RoE 9.8%, sustainable growth rate of 3.1%.

RISK REWARD CHART

OVERWEIGHT THESIS

- A turn in the rate cycle will affect NIM, but impacts are manageable. We also see cyclically weaker loan and fee income, but the longer term structural picture is better, and we expect UOB will grow at a similar rate to Singapore peers.
- Capital ratios are strong, and we expect a ~50% ordinary dividend payout, plus special dividends and share buyback.
- The market is still not convinced that UOB can reach its 14% RoE target for 2026. Successful delivery on Citi integration could drive upward consensus revisions over time.
